Read the passage below and answer the following question.

Is it a bird? Is it a plane? No, it's dynamic remotely operated navigation equipment, more commonly known as a drone. These unmanned devices are everywhere and they can do everything - from saving lives to delivering pizza.

But as they have taken off in popularity, the number of problems associated with drones is also on the rise. Today drones are no longer only operated by the military, with smaller versions utilised by companies and individuals for a wide range of reasons. For example, recently, Amazon, said to be the world's largest online store, has showcased a drone aimed at getting packages to its customers within 30 minutes.
